Subject: Multiple Unjustified Channel Terminations with Lack of Transparency and Inadequate Creator Support

Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing to you not merely to file an individual complaint, but to bring to your urgent attention a systemic and concerning issue affecting a significant number of YouTube creators. My own recent experience serves as a clear example of this broader problem: the sudden termination of channels without prior warning, specific explanation, or any meaningful process for appeal.

On the 15th of August 2025, my YouTube channel, @KarelTest, was abruptly terminated. The only justification provided was a generic reference to a violation of the "spam, scams, or commercially deceptive content" policy. This explanation is so broad that it is effectively meaningless, as no information was given as to which aspect of which specific video, or even which part of a video, was deemed to be in violation. Without this crucial detail, it is impossible for a creator to understand, let alone rectify, the alleged mistake.

This lack of transparency extended throughout the subsequent "appeal" process, which I can only describe as inadequate and frustrating:

I was offered a single opportunity to appeal through a form limited to 1000 characters—a wholly insufficient space to address an accusation that has not been clearly defined.

My appeal was swiftly denied via a standard no-reply@youtube.com email, which provided no further clarification or justification for the decision.

A further attempt to seek support from the @TeamYouTube account on the social media platform X was met with a dismissive response, merely stating that the appeal decision was final.

My research confirms that my experience is not an isolated incident. Online forums are filled with reports from other creators, from 2024 through recent weeks, who have had their channels terminated under identical, opaque circumstances. Some have reported their channels being reinstated months later, in the summer of 2025, which suggests that significant errors in your moderation process are indeed occurring.

This pattern leads me to consider two potential underlying causes for this systemic failure:

Malfunctioning Automated Systems: It is highly probable that the AI-driven bots used for moderation are generating false positives, leading to wrongful channel terminations. The subsequent appeal process appears to be equally inadequately automated, failing to provide the necessary human oversight to correct these errors.

Exploitation by Malicious Actors: A few days prior to my channel's termination, I reported several fraudulent advertisements on YouTube that were using deepfakes of public figures. While my initial reports were accepted, a final one was strangely rejected shortly before my channel was taken down. This raises the alarming possibility that malicious actors are not only running these scam ads but have also found a way to compromise YouTube's reporting system to retaliate against users who flag their content.

The primary purpose of this letter is to warn you of these critical flaws in your system. The current process is opaque and punitive, leaving creators completely in the dark. For the health of the YouTube community, it is essential that creators receive specific, actionable feedback on their alleged violations. Without knowing what they have done wrong, they cannot prevent future mistakes, which undermines the very purpose of community guidelines.

I urge you to investigate these systemic issues with the gravity they deserve. This is not just about reinstating a single channel; it is about restoring faith in YouTube as a fair and transparent platform for all its users.

I look forward to your substantive response on this matter.

Sincerely,

Karel Decherf

Subject: Re: Your YouTube Channel Suspension - Request for Clarification and Re-evaluation - [@KarelTest]

Dear YouTube Team,

The core of my problem is that I have already completed this one-time procedure inadequately and without a clear understanding of the alleged violation. The fundamental issue I am facing is a lack of specific information... I was informed of the suspension of my channel without prior warning and the only justification provided for my channel's termination was a generic reference to the "spam, scams, or commercially deceptive content" policy. This explanation is so broad that it is effectively meaningless, as no details were given as to which aspect of a specific video was deemed to be in violation. Without this crucial information, it is impossible for a creator to understand, let alone rectify, the alleged mistake.

I must honestly state that I navigated the one-time appeal process inadequately. The decision to suspend my channel came as a complete shock. The severity of the accusation—'spam, deceptive practices and scams'—was deeply unsettling, and I was not prepared to formulate a proper response. Instead of using the appeal to seek clarification and present a well-reasoned case, my submission primarily reflected my bewilderment. For your reference, here is the sequence of events: Friday, August 15, 1:23 PM: I unexpectedly received the suspension notification. In a state of confusion, I hastily submitted the appeal form without proper preparation or a clear understanding of the specific violation. Saturday, August 16, 3:21 AM: I received a swift rejection of my appeal. After the rejection, I contacted @TeamYouTube on X.com to seek the clarification I should have requested earlier. They informed me that since an appeal had already been denied, they could no longer assist. This led me to send a formal letter to Google Ireland Limited on August 20, 2025 ; after which I received an email from YouTube Legal Support Team <legal+0rh36hxuz30z02o@support.youtube.com> redirecting me to this form

Dear The YouTube Legal Support Team,

Thank you for your email of September 3, 2025. I am writing to you directly today not merely to repeat my appeal, but to provide a thorough, well-researched analysis of the potential policy violations that led to my channel's termination. I was acting in good faith and hope to respectfully request a viable path to bring my channel into full and complete compliance with YouTube's guidelines.

Following the guidance in your email, I submitted another, more detailed appeal via the web form on September 3. Regrettably, the outcome was an identical, templated rejection, confirming the termination without offering any of the specific details I need to understand and rectify the mistake. This experience underscores that the standard appeals process may not be equipped for cases like mine, which require a nuanced review of context. It is for this reason that I am respectfully presenting my own detailed analysis directly to you now.

The fundamental issue I have faced is a lack of specific information. The termination notice cited "spam, deceptive practices and scams," a category so broad that it was impossible to understand the specific error without further details. My initial, hastily submitted appeal reflected my bewilderment rather than a well-reasoned case, for which I sincerely apologize.

After extensive analysis, aided by powerful diagnostic tools like Google's Gemini Pro AI, I have come to a clear understanding of the most probable cause. I believe my channel was terminated by an automated system flagging an unintentional but clear violation of Google's and YouTube's brand and impersonation policies. This violation was specifically triggered by the public-facing name of the application demonstrated in my final, and only public, video.

A critical detail in the timeline of events strongly supports this conclusion: The first two videos on my channel were set to 'Unlisted' or 'Private', as they were intended solely for the Google Workspace Marketplace verification process. These videos existed on the channel without any issue. However, the channel was terminated immediately and automatically on August 15, within hours of my uploading the third video as 'Public'. This sequence of events strongly suggests that the public visibility of this specific video's content triggered the enforcement action.

Below is my detailed analysis of the three videos that constituted my channel's entire library.

1. Video: aistudioreader 1.webm (Demonstrating "Google AI Studio - File Reader") - Published as 'Public'

Primary Issue (The Trigger): I now fully understand that the name of my Chrome extension, "Google AI Studio - File Reader," when featured in a public video, is the most likely cause for the termination. It directly incorporates an official Google product name, which I now recognize creates an unintentional impression of official affiliation and violates YouTube's "deceptive practices" policy.

Context on Functionality and Positive Community Impact: While I now see the critical error in the name, I must provide context on the functionality. This extension is not malicious or deceptive in its purpose. On the contrary, it has been enthusiastically received by the community. Since its publication on the Google Chrome Web Store, it has rapidly gained a significant and growing user base. This strong positive reception demonstrates that the tool fulfills a genuine need for users of Google AI Studio. My work was entirely in the spirit of a third-party developer constructively building upon the Google ecosystem, based on direct community demand.

Good-Faith Assumption of Compliance: My belief that this naming was acceptable was reinforced by the fact that the extension was fully reviewed, approved, and published by the Google Chrome Web Store team. This approval from another part of the Google ecosystem mistakenly led me to believe the naming was compliant. I now understand that YouTube's enforcement policies are separate and more stringent.

2. & 3. Videos: YouTube Playlist Collector and OCR combi (Workspace Add-ons) - Published as 'Unlisted'

Analysis: The names and content of these other videos may also contain elements that could be flagged. However, because these videos were 'Unlisted' and intended only for Google's own internal OAuth verification team for the Workspace Marketplace, they likely evaded the public-facing automated scans.

Compliance Context: These videos were a mandatory part of a verification process to demonstrate that the add-ons use the official YouTube Data API v3 and Google Sheets API correctly and do not violate any Terms of Service. They are a testament to my attempts to follow official developer procedures.

I want to be unequivocally clear: it was never my intention to violate any policies, impersonate Google, or mislead any users. My sole intention has always been to contribute positively and constructively to the Google, YouTube, and wider internet ecosystem.

I sincerely apologize for this unintentional mistake. I believe my track record as a developer, with a published and approved extension on the Chrome Web Store that is valued by its users, demonstrates my commitment to being a constructive member of the community. I hope you will see this situation not as a malicious act, but as a learning experience for a developer who is eager to understand and comply with all platform rules.

Now that I have this understanding, I am 100% willing and prepared to take the following immediate corrective actions if given the opportunity:

Rename the Applications: I will immediately change the name of the "Google AI Studio - File Reader" to a compliant name, such as "File Reader for AI Studio," and similarly adjust the "YouTube Playlist Collector" to "Playlist Collector for YouTube."

Delete and Re-record All Videos: I will permanently delete all three videos from the channel. I will then re-record the demonstrations showing only the correctly named, policy-compliant applications.

Ensure Correct Visibility and Add Disclaimers: Future verification videos will remain 'Unlisted'. Any public videos will include explicit disclaimers stating that the tools are from a third party and are not affiliated with, sponsored, or endorsed by Google or YouTube.

I am not asking you to overlook a policy violation. I am providing this detailed context to show that it was an unintentional, good-faith error made by a developer who is eager to contribute correctly. The permanent termination of my channel currently prevents me from making these necessary corrections.

I respectfully request the following:

Confirmation: Could you please confirm if my analysis is correct and that the channel was terminated due to the public video demonstrating an app with a name that violated brand policies?

A Chance to Rectify: I humbly ask for a temporary reinstatement of my channel, perhaps under a probationary status. This would grant me the necessary access to log in, delete all non-compliant content, and bring my channel into full and complete alignment with YouTube's guidelines.

Thank you for your time and for reconsidering this matter with the detailed context I have now provided. I am confident that, given the chance, I can be a responsible and valuable member of the YouTube creator community.

Respectfully,

Karel Decherf

Dear The YouTube Legal Support Team,

I am writing to you with critical new information following the termination of a second YouTube channel associated with my identity, @Karel Gerard Robert, for violating the Circumvention Policy.

First and foremost, I want to state that I fully understand and respect this policy. As soon as I was made aware of the initial termination of my developer channel, @KarelTest, I took immediate action. As a sign of my commitment to fully complying with YouTube's rules as I understand them, I have proactively performed a Google Takeout and permanently deleted all other YouTube channels associated with my accounts. My goal is not to circumvent, but to understand, rectify, and comply.

This new development makes it imperative to address the root cause of the initial termination of @KarelTest. My extensive analysis has pointed to two likely, intertwined reasons, and I desperately need clarification to avoid future errors.

Hypothesis 1: Unintentional Brand Impersonation

I now understand that using names like "Google AI Studio - File Reader" and "YouTube Playlist Collector" in my app titles was a clear violation. However, my lack of awareness was heavily influenced by its widespread and seemingly accepted practice across YouTube. A brief search reveals countless highly-viewed tutorials and guides from established creators using Google's brand names in their titles, such as "The RIGHT Way to Set Up Brand Search Campaigns in Google Ads" and "Google for your Brand".^{[1][3]} This created a genuine, albeit mistaken, belief that this was standard descriptive practice.

Hypothesis 2 (Increasingly Likely): Content Mistaken for Malicious Activity

This leads me to a more pressing concern: that the content of my videos was the primary trigger. Two of the videos were created as a mandatory requirement for Google's own internal Workspace Marketplace OAuth verification process. They visually demonstrated how to navigate the "Google hasn't verified this app" warning screen.

While this is a standard, required procedure for developers, I now realize with horror that a video visually guiding a user to click "Advanced" and "Go to... (unsafe)" is functionally indistinguishable from a phishing or malware tutorial to an automated moderation system. The fact that I was demonstrating this required step for Google's own internal process is the vital, missing context.

My Core Question and Sincere Request

This brings me to the central question I hope you can help me with: Was the termination triggered by the brand names—a practice so common it is easily misunderstood—or was it the required, but visually alarming, content of the verification videos?

I was never warned before the first termination. My intent was purely constructive: to create tools that help the Google user community, one of which was even approved by the Chrome Web Store team. I sincerely apologize for creating content that, without its vital context, was reasonably flagged as a violation.

Given that I have now removed my entire presence from your platform as a sign of good faith, I humbly ask for one final consideration: a temporary, probationary reinstatement of my original channel, @KarelTest, for the sole purpose of allowing me to rectify my mistakes. I will delete all offending content, rename my applications, and ensure any future content is in absolute compliance.

Thank you for your time and for reviewing this complex situation.

Respectfully,

Karel Decherf

Dear YouTube Legal Support Team,

This email serves as a formal notice regarding the termination of my YouTube channel, Karel Test (URL: https://www.youtube.com/channel/UCETH_r8bn3OY09WLPnnANQA), on August 15, 2025.

To date, and contrary to your obligations under the EU's Digital Services Act (DSA), I have not received a transparent, specific, and meaningful justification for this decision.

The basis of my case is that YouTube has violated the Digital Services Act in several ways:

Violation of Article 17 (Statement of Reasons): You failed to provide a clear and specific reason for the termination. A generic reference to "spam, deceptive practices, and scams" is entirely insufficient under the DSA. You did not provide the specific facts and circumstances of the case, nor did you identify which content allegedly violated which policy.

Ineffective Internal Complaint-Handling System (Article 20): The internal appeal process was fully automated, offered no meaningful opportunity for a human review, and resulted in repeated, identical rejections without any further explanation. This does not constitute an effective complaint system as required by law.

Imposition of a Disproportionate Sanction: The immediate and permanent termination of my channel—without any prior warnings or 'strikes'—for an unspecified and unsubstantiated violation is a wholly disproportionate sanction.

Please be advised that, as a user within the European Union, I am now exercising my right under Article 21 of the DSA to seek resolution through a certified out-of-court dispute settlement (ODS) body.

I will be submitting a formal complaint to a certified ODS body based on the violations listed above.

I hereby request one final, substantive internal review of this decision by a human agent before I proceed with the formal ODS filing.
